

Obstinate Eczema.
"Enclosed please find $1.00 for two more boxes of Tetterine. The box you sent me has almost cured the most obstinate case of Eczema I ever saw. I am very grateful for such a blessing as your Tetterine has been to me. James L. Jones, Jellico, Tenn., 60c. box by mail, if your druggist don't have it, by J. T. Shurprine.

HE NEVER CARRIES A PISTOL.
Because a Duel Taught Him a Serious Lesson.

There is a prominent Baltimorean who now attends church regularly, but who still delights to tell of some of his escapades in early life, says the Baltimore American. "I was a member of a prominent club when I was a young man," he relates, "and in one of our bouts one night I unintentionally insulted a fellow-member. At least I was told the following morning when my senses had returned, that I had insulted the man that he would probably challenge me to fight a duel. Sure enough a challenge came through the ordinary channels and I was advised by my friends to accept or to submit to perpetual disgrace. I accepted and selected pistols. The dueling ground was a spacious yard in the rear of the clubhouse. There we assembled with our seconds and surgeons. Much to my surprise the whole club turned out to witness the affair of honor. I objected to such publicity, but was assured by my friends that it was all right, and I was prevailed upon to face my opponent. I was thoroughly mad and I did not care whether I killed my enemy or half a dozen onlookers. We were placed ten paces apart, with our backs to each other. At the word 'fire' we wheeled and began to pump lead at each other, advancing toward each other at each shot. I emptied two or three chambers of the revolver which had been given me without wounding my opponent. I then threw it away with disgust and pulled my own from my hip pocket. If you ever saw consternation it existed in that backyard for a few minutes. My enemy turned heads and ran into the clubhouse. The spectators scrambled over each other to get out of range. Before I could fire at my retreating foe my second grabbed me and succeeded in disarming me. I was then told that the whole thing was a hoax and that my enemy and myself had been shooting blank cartridges at each other. I did not relish the joke, because I had endured all of the terror which must come to any man who stands up to kill or be killed. That episode was a turning point in my life. I have never carried a pistol from that day to this."

IN A FAR COUNTRY.
When he came to himself he said, "I will arise!"
About are the parched plains, above the linden skies
While his heart, like a caged bird, beats its bars with homesick cries.

Last night he dreamed that she came, that she gave him a mother's kiss;
That her soft hand smoothed his brow with its touch of balm and biles,
And swept away from his brain its awful remembrances.

He dreamed that she led him forth, back, back over moor and fell;
He heard the drip of the stream, in the cool of his native dell;
And saw the sunrise break on the hills he loved so well.

He sits in his sleep—he wakes—and with him wakes Despair!
And Hunger, and Thirst, and Death, and the snarling swine are there!
And the swine-head's reeking garb—O God! Must he longer wait?

Why, the hired servants at home, on his his father's bounty dine!
They have bread enough and to spare—the fruit of the field and vine—
While no man giveth him leave to share the husks with the swine!

Then I know not how, but I know in that hour of mightiest stress,
A hope leaps up in his heart, like a spring in the wilderness:
The boy has come to himself! "I will arise!" he says.

The message is thine, O boy! Afar from thy home and kin,
The blossom dead on the bough, and bitter the wage of sin!
Return! There's a path across—and Father will let thee in!
—Youth's Companion.

Forming a Partnership.

In a recent morning a young man turned down a Yarmouth row. He was a handsome young fellow, somewhat shabbily dressed, and as he walked he carelessly took stock of his surroundings.

Near the bottom of the row a window was open, and by a geranium that bloomed in a pot, the first and only flower he had seen, a girl was leaning lightly on her elbow.

In the opposite doorway a woman with a red face and brandishing a broom in her hand was barring the entrance against a herculean man in an oily frock.

"I ax you ag'in, John Wade," shouted he of the oily, "if you're a-goin' to sea?"

"An' I tell you ag'in, skipper," replied a dogged voice from the interior, "I ain't a-goin' to sea."

"Then," cried the giant, wildly, "what am I to do? Here's the vessel ready to sail, an' you a-sulkin'. But as sure as my name is Bill Thompson I'll police ye."

The girl at the window, who seemed used to such scenes, smiled. Looking up at her, and seeing for the first time that she was in deep mourning, the young man smiled also.

"Am I of any use?" he said to the wearer of the oily. "I want a job."

"If you're ready an' willin', my lad," he said, "you're of use. But if you ain't, you ain't. D'ye want a berth?"

"I want everything," answered the young man in a low tone. "I'm homeless and penniless. But I'm a landsman."

"That ain't a bit o' consequence. What d'ye say? Will ye go? 'Tis for eight weeks."

"I don't care if it's for eight years. There's nothing to stop me here."

"Come on, then," cried the delighted fisherman. "But, stop—what's your name, my lad?"

"John Smith," was the answer; and his hesitation escaped the skipper.

"Well, Smith, for fear of accidents some one had better take your money. Who'll ye leave it with?"

The young man again looked up at the window, at the sweet, pure face above him. The gaze of the rough sea giant beside him followed his glance.

"Oh, I see," he exclaimed; "you're goin' to take it, miss. Well, you know where to go. Old Tom Price is the owner, an' the name of the vessel is the Sancy Lass. Come on, Smith, no more hanky-panky. Your sweetheart 'all take your money." And he seized the newly shipped by the arm.

"No, no," she cried, in confusion. "I do not know the gentleman. I—I—"

But already Smith, with the hand of the skipper on his arm, and been hurried out of earshot, and before she could reach the door the two had vanished down the row.

Eight weeks later a young man, bronzed and hearty, stood on Yarmouth quay. It was John Smith. His sea rig had given place to a decent suit of clothes, and he seemed pondering which way to go.

At last he wandered away to the seashore. Finding a spot where pale blue violets lay low among the sea grass, he flung himself down and pulled out an envelope. It contained a postoffice order wrapped in a sheet of note paper, and on this was written "Katharine Perry." The amount was the sum due to him on his pay card.

He had been to the house, but found her gone. Yet here was his money left by her in this form.

On his homeward path he stopped to buy a morning paper. It was the rule at Yarmouth to allow news time to mature before it was distributed, and Smith was handed the Standard with a short bark. Quite undisturbed he began to look it over. Suddenly he caught his breath; his gaze was riveted on an advertisement that read thus:

"George Neal is earnestly requested to communicate with Messrs. Furness & Wapp, solicitors, Lincoln's Inn Fields, when he will hear something to his advantage. Any person knowing of the whereabouts of the said G. N. and communicating the same to the above firm will be suitably rewarded."

Before noon that day John Smith had shaken the dust of Yarmouth from his feet and was on his way to London. As he burst into the office a carefully dressed old gentleman wearing a pair of gold-rimmed glasses stepped forward to greet him. This he did by nearly shaking his arm off.

"Why, my dear George," he cried, "how glad I am to see you! We have been advertising for you all over the country. How is it you haven't seen our advertisement before?"

In a few words the young man told his tale. The old solicitor listened with much interest, then his face grew grave.

"So you have not heard the news, my boy," he said. "Your uncle is dead."

"Dead!" repeated George Neal sadly, "and we parted in anger merely because I refused to follow the profession he had chosen for me."

"If we thought oftener of the king of terrors there would be fewer quarrels," said the lawyer kindly, "but he, too, was sorry, George, though when you hear the rest you may think he took an odd way of showing it. I was called in to draw up a fresh will. Subject to one condition, he made his property over to you."

"And that condition?"

"Excuse me a moment," said Mr. Furness looking at his watch. "I expect a lady here presently; let us step into my private room."

"And that condition?" said George Neal firmly.

"No, my dear boy," said the lawyer, "don't fire up. You have had your way, let the dead man have his. In some little miserable seaport on the east coast your uncle had what nearly every successful man has nowadays—a poor relation. It came to his knowledge that this poor relation had died and left a daughter. This was quite enough for your uncle, and he made it a requisite condition that you marry her. The lady's name is—"

"Stop!" With his face expressing all the bitterness he felt the young man rose.

Footsteps had been coming nearer every moment, and involuntarily Neal's face turned to the door. The clerk came first, then the lawyer, with old-fashioned courtesy, came forward to intercept the visitor.

"Miss Kate Perry," he said, "and this, my dear young lady, is George Neal. All the blood that was in Neal's body rushed to his face. He stood grasping at the back of his chair, unable to utter a word. Then the little hand that the lawyer held started, trembling so violently that it attracted Mr. Furness' attention, and he hastily led her to a chair. "It is possible," he said, "that my introduction comes a trifle late. Am I wrong in this surmise?"

"I—I," stammered Kate, "Mr. Smith," then she stopped, blushing deeply.

At last George Neal's tongue was untied and he hastened to the rescue.

"I have met this young lady before," he said, "under very singular circumstances; we now meet under circumstances stranger still. An explanation is due to her, and if you will give a little time to explain—"

"Certainly, certainly," said Mr. Furness, rubbing his hands. "Take all the time you require. I am quite content to let Cupid take my place as mediator," and with a beaming face he bowed himself out.

When it seemed to the despairing clerk that the best part of the day had gone Mr. Furness went back to his strangely met visitors.

"May I hope," he said gently, "that the explanation has not been a tiresome one?"

"No," said George, with a glowing face. "To me it hasn't. I have offered my dear Kate the property without incumbrance. But she has refused to accept it on any such terms. What are we to do?"

"My advice," said the old lawyer, "is to go into partnership. And if the wishes of a dry bit of legal parchment, which had a love dream once, can follow you far, they will repeat good luck and much happiness."
